Industrial revolution

Faux Tuscan fades as modern interior-design stores migrate north.

Thomas Keller brought his modern sensibility to Yountville back in 1994, but it has taken more than 10 years for the rest of wine country to catch up. Now, with the opening of a handful of new home-design boutiques (most in the last year or so), a critical mass of new shops are adding their own rural-industrial twist by blending rusticity with modernity in a refreshing, palazzo-free way. ■ MARY JO BOWLING

Ma(i)sonry

The vibe: Part fine-art salon, part found-object emporium—all in a historic stone building (the owners pour wine, too).

The stuff: A rotating art exhibition is the backdrop for mod furniture from San Francisco's Citizen: Citizen and Sonoma's Ron Mann Design, as well as vintage objects made functional (who knew a stack of Victorian men's collars could make such a cool lamp?).
